The merchants of the city have again protested against the assessment of their stocks of goods at the inventory value and they have addressed Assessor Pratt on the subject. Their contention is that the inventory value was not a cash value and that any stock would be sold as a whole for considerable less than the inventory value. It is further contended that the method in all mainland cities is to make a reduction from the inventory value and that merchandise stocks are assessed only at from 60 per cent of such value.
